

Certificate of Analysis — Available Upon Request

Forward Peptides is committed to full transparency at every stage of production. Each product in our catalog undergoes independent third-party laboratory testing prior to release, and the corresponding Certificate of Analysis is available to any researcher who requests it.

How to Request Your COA

Simply email us at support@forwardpeptidesco.com with your order number or the product you're researching and we'll send your COA directly within 24 hours. Every document includes:

- Product name and lot number
- Molecular composition and purity percentage
- Testing methodology and instrumentation used
- Third-party laboratory name and accreditation
- Manufacturing date and expiration window
- Pass/fail criteria and final disposition

Why Request-Based?

Our peptides are manufactured by an established U.S. compounding laboratory that intentionally works with only a select number of brands — not a high-volume white-label operation. That exclusivity is part of what drew us to them. To maintain the integrity of that relationship and protect the confidentiality of our supply chain, all lot documentation is finalized under the Forward Peptides brand before release. This ensures every COA you receive is properly attributed to your exact lot and reflects our specific manufacturing run — not a generic batch report. We think that level of documentation is worth the process, and we're happy to put it in your hands directly.

Our Commitment

We believe researchers deserve more than a label. Every compound we ship is U.S. compounded, independently verified, and fully documented — because what's in the vial should never be a question. If you have any questions about our testing process or want to verify your compound before it arrives, reach out anytime. We're here.
